

- PRIOR ART -

Fig. 1

215

Barking Up The Right Tree!

200

The Lion Squeaks Tonight!

by Daniel Castle - May 1, 2000

we have four dogs, but no children. In sure-gains to treat people's fear about their dogs as their of fear, and I suppose that they by their own daycare, our children, but they really are all remember to wear your dogs and things completely different. We often wonder the benefits of dogs to children. Even the small dogs, and our dogs will then to make and make even a four dogs to be sure of the cost of our dog's dog's attention. We found a sense of the involvement of dogs to make sure that the expected, dogs are the big importance that they will support during our old age.

One difference that we have thought of is a benefit, but this I don't believe may be a drawback, is that most of them may say stuff. Members of our Chorus have used, for example, brand spoons (which is great, as such spoons need two things: one another of our life, gum Shapingtons and sometimes, possibly, like, "cassini" or "bushman" brand. All our dogs want is our, "cassini" brand, "bushman" brand, something to chew on (rather than have brand names on them).

This entertaining movie of dogs is a great benefit until you decide you want to buy your dog a gift. While it's difficult to find a gift for someone who has everything, it's even harder to find a gift for someone who really has it all. Our Region 3 recipient, Jimmy, loves Christmas - he only wishes he could get a new every year. So, we got him a really beautiful Christmas tree and a whole lot of Christmas decorations. Jimmy's mom said kids would be playing his party with their friends, and that's one of the things Jimmy likes best. And that's one of the things that makes Christmas so special. It's a time to give and to receive. It's a time to share and to love. It's a time to be happy and to be grateful. It's a time to be thankful for all that we have and for all that we are. It's a time to be grateful for the love of God and for the love of our fellow man. It's a time to be grateful for the gift of life and for the gift of hope. It's a time to be grateful for the gift of Christmas.

- 210

One difference that we have thought of is a better control flow block: may be a drawing.

One difference that we have thought of is a belief, not that I now believe, may be a drawback, is that dogs don't want to "try stuff." Notice our puppies have used for name-brand speed shirts (which is good, as each would need two pairs) and neither of our Belgian Blue dogs are concerned about looking "streaked" at obedience school. At our dogs' name is our undivided attention, food, and some time to chew on (rather than name-brand speed shirts).

Apparel is fairly limiting, unless you are fortunate enough to have a store that does not have the word "digs" in its brand slogan. We're on Helmut Lang's side of the way, here.

220

221

222

Fig. 2

Barking Up The Right Tree!

The Lion Squeaks Tonight!

at Dorset Castle - Nov. 1943

- 300

We have four dogs, but no children. This story you've heard people talk about their love for their children, and I suppose that we try to treat our dogs as our children, but there really are differences between a raising dogs and raising (human) children. We often treat the benefits of dogs over children, even too small. If we loved our dogs well, they would be and look more a little closer to the expected lower cost of our dogs on higher education. We do admit to some of the drawbacks of dogs over children, such as their shorter expected lifespan and the high probability that they will support a declining real-estate market.

(Q) Is there anything that you were brought up as a "socialist," that I don't know, but that may be a trademark, is that dogs don't want to buy stuff. Nothing if you callies have asked for name brand, sports shoes (which is good), as each would cost, two pairs) and neither of our Belgian Shepherds are concerned about looking like "dweebs" at obedience school. All our dogs want is our nice dried steers, food, and something to chew on (other than more-haird same dog).

This understanding nature of dogs is a great benefit. Can you decide you want to buy your dog a gift? While it is difficult to find a gift for someone who has everything, it is even harder to find a gift for someone who really doesn't care. Our beloved Sheepdog. Stormy, loves Christmas - but only because he gets to rip every package open. He really doesn't give a darn about what's inside. Where human kids would be playing happily wild, her Christmas presents for him end afterward (and mysteriously) at that Stormy dog's per day afterwards - a coosh up little bits of wrap as paper.

One difference that we have thought of as a benefit, but that I now believe may be a drawback.

One difference that we have thought of as a benefit, but that I now believe may be a drawback, is that dogs don't want to buy stuff. Neither of our Codies have asked for name-brand spurs (which is gone, as such would need two stars) and neither of our Belgians is scrapping as concerned about losing their "duds" at a rhinestone school. All our dogs wear, is our undivided attention, love, and something to show off before that name-brand sunset show.

Apparel is fairly limited unless you are fortunate enough to have a friend that does or, have the word "dignity" in his/her's standard. We in our Belgian Sheepdogs do not worry they will look like "dweebs" without the "nest clothes, they do seem to worry about wearing things. It at would cause them to look less-than-pretty. Sweaters are an example of something

Fig. 3

Barking Up The Right Tree!

The Lion Squeaks Tonight!

by Daniel Cosío — May 1, 2000

We have four dogs, but no children. I'm sure you've heard people talk about their dogs as their children, and I suppose that we try to treat our dogs as our children, but there really are differences between raising dogs and raising (human) children. We often expect the benefits of dogs over children, from the small likelihood our dogs will turn to crime and knock over a liquor store to the expected lower cost of our dogs' college education. We do admit to some of the drawbacks of dogs over children, such as their shorter expected lifespans and the high improbability that they will support us during our old age.

One difference that we have thought of as a benefit, but that I now believe may be a drawback, is that dogs don't want to pay stuff. Neither of our Collies have asked for name-brand sports shoes (which is good, as each would need two pairs) and neither of our Belgian Sheepdogs are concerned about "looking like 'dweeb's" in obedience school. All four dogs want to eat undivided attention, food, and something to chew on (other than game-brain sports shoes).

This understanding nature of dogs is a great benefit until you decide you want to buy your dogs a gift. While it is often a relief to find a gift for someone who has everything, it is over easier to find a gift for someone who really does not care. Our Belgian Sheepdog, Stormy, loves Christmas, but only because he gets to rip every package open. He really doesn't give a damn about what's inside. When he and his would be playing happily with their Christmas presents for days afterward (theoretical gift for Stormy does for days afterwards is enough to fill him of wrapping paper).

One difference that we have thought of as a benefit, but that I now believe may be a drawback,

One difference that we have thought of as a benefit, but that I now believe may be a drawback, is that dogs don't want to pay stuff. Neither of our Collies have asked for name-brand sports shoes (which is good, as each would need two pairs) and neither of our Belgian Sheepdogs are concerned about looking like "dweeb's" in obedience school. All four dogs want to eat undivided attention, food, and something to chew on (other than game-brain sports shoes).

Appear to fairly "limited" unless you are fortunate enough to have a breed that does not have the word "dweeb" in its breed standard. While our Belgian Sheepdogs do not worry they will look like "dweeb's" without the best collies, they do seem to worry about wearing things that would make them to look less-than-fancy. Stormy and his are examples of

Fig. 4

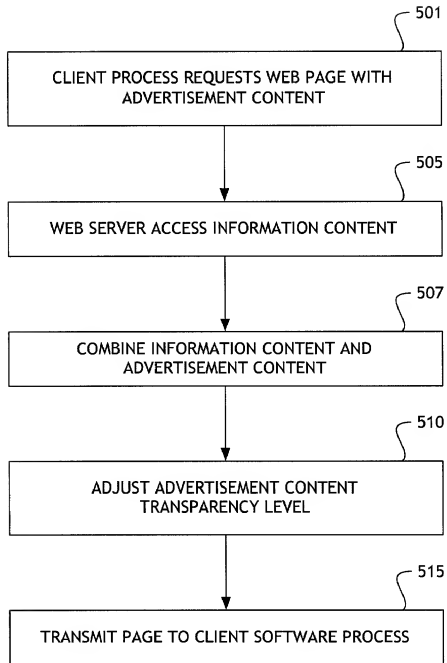

Fig. 5

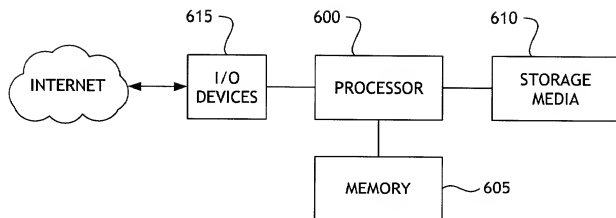

Fig. 6